PHILIP GLASS (Composer) was born in Baltimore on January 31, 1937. He discovered music in his father's radio repair shop. In addition to servicing radios, Ben Glass carried a line of records and, when certain ones did poorly, he would take them home and play them for his three children, trying to discover why they didn't appeal to customers. These happened to be recordings of the great chamber works, and the future composer rapidly became familiar with Beethoven quartets, Schubert sonatas, Shostakovich symphonies and other music then considered "offbeat." It was not until he was in his upper teens did Glass begin to encounter more "standard" classics.

Glass began the violin at six and became serious about music when he took up the flute at eight. But by the time he was 15, he had become frustrated with the limited flute repertory as well as with musical life in post-war Baltimore. During his second year in high school, he applied for admission to the University of Chicago, passed and, with his parents' encouragement, moved to Chicago where he supported himself with part-time jobs waiting tables and loading airplanes at airports. He majored in mathematics and philosophy, and in off hours practiced piano and concentrated on such composers as Ives and Webern.

At 19, Glass graduated from the University of Chicago and, determined to become a composer, moved on to New York and the Julliard School. By then he had abandoned the 12-tone techniques he had been using in Chicago and preferred American composers like Aaron Copeland and William Schuman.

By the time he was 23, Glass had studied with Vincent Persichetti, Darius Milhaud and William Bergsma. He had rejected serialism and preferred such maverick composers as Harry Partch, Ives, Moondog, Henry Cowell, Virgil Thomson, but he still had not found his own voice. Still searching, he moved to Paris and two years of intensive study under Nadia Boulanger.

In Paris, he was hired by a filmmaker to transcribe the Indian music of Ravi Shankar in notation readable by French musicians and, in the process, discovered the techniques of Indian music. Glass promptly renounced his previous music and, after researching music in North Africa, India and the Himalayas, returned to New York and began applying Eastern techniques to his own work.

By 1974, he had composed a large collection of new music, much of it for use by the theater company Mabou Mines (Glass was one of the co-founders of that company), and most of it composed for his own performing group, the Philip Glass Ensemble. This period culminated in Music in 12 Parts, a three-hour summation of Glass' new music, and reached their apogee in 1976 with the Philip Glass/Robert Wilson opera Einstein on the Beach, the four-and-one-half-hour epic now seen as a landmark in twentieth century music-theater. Glass's output since Einstein has ranged from opera (Satyagraha, Akhnaten, The Making of the Representative for Planet 8, The Fall of the House of Usher, The Juniper Tree) to film (Koyaanisqatsi, Mishima, The Thin Blue Line, Powaqqatsi) to dance (A Descent into the Maelstrom and In the Upper Room), and such unclassifiable theater pieces as The Photographer and 1000 Airplanes on the Roof, and numerous recordings. Among his recently completed works are Itaipu, a large-scale work for chorus and orchestra, commissioned by the Atlanta Symphony, and Hydrogen Jukebox, an opera with poetry by Allen Ginsberg, which received its world premiere at Spoleto U.S.A. His current projects include Orphee, a chamber opera based on the film by Jean Cocteau; The Voyage, commissioned by the Metropolitan Opera for its 1992 season; and White Raven, a collaboration with Robert Wilson.

DAVID GORDON (Writer, Director) performed in the companies of James Waring and Yvonne Rainer in the 1960's. He showed work at the Living Theatre and in the first Judson Church performances. In the early 1970's he was a founding member of the improvisational ensemble, Grand Union. In 1978 he formalized the process of making work for varying numbers of performers by establishing the Pick Up Company as a legal entity. Since that time a core company has been established with whom he rehearses and tours regularly. Mr. Gordon has been commissioned to make work for dance companies in the United States and Europe, including the American Ballet Theatre, Dance Theater of Harlem, Groupe de Recherche Choreographique de l'Opera de Paris, the Rambert Dance Company, and Mikhail Baryshnikov's White Oak Dance Project. His work was seen at the Brooklyn Academy of Music in 1984 when he constructed the movement for the NEXT WAVE Festival's presentation of the Philip Glass work, The Photographer. The Pick Up Company has since been presented in the NEXT WAVE Festival in both 1986 and 1988. Mr. Gordon is a Guggenheim Fellow (1981 and 1987), has served as a panelist for the Dance Program for the New York State Council on the Arts and as a Panelist and Chairman of the Dance Program Panel of the National Endowment for the Arts. In 1984, he received a New York Performance Award (Bessie) for Sustained Choreographic Achievement. Mr. Gordon's dance/music/theater work, The Mysteries And What's So Funny?, was honored in 1991 with a Bessie Award and in 1992 with an Obie Award. Mr. Gordon is profiled in Sally Banes' book, Terpsichore in Sneakers, and by Arlene Croce in the November 29, 1982 issue of The New Yorker. In May 1980, David Gordon's work was included in the Dance in America broadcast Beyond the Mainstream, and he is one of seven artists featured in Michael Blackwood's film, Making Dances. His ten-minute TV videotapes produced by the Pick Up Company have been shown by Channel 4/Great Britain. They were selected for the 1984 Olympic Arts Festival and were aired in August 1986 on an episode on the national PBS series, Alive From Off Center, devoted to Gordon's work. In October of 1987 David Gordon's Made in U.S.A. aired nationally on WNET/Great Performances and later received three Emmy nominations. The program featured Mikhail Baryshnikov and Valda Setterfield in three of Gordon's works for the Pick Up Company and American Ballet Theatre. In 1989 the Company completed a video work titled My Folks which aired on BBC-TV in October of that year. A new work for television, Punch and Judy Get Divorced, was created in 1992 and received its broadcast premiere on KTCA/Alive TV in June. The script for The Mysteries And What's So Funny? is being published this year by Grove Press in an anthology of contemporary American plays edited by Michael Feingold.
